Fresh off a whirlwind 2020, Brooklyn based Electro-R&B duo Tropic are back with their first release of the new 2021. Their new single ‘Slave to the Rhythm’ is an 80s funk inspired dance track that harks back to the memories of packed dance floors and nights out on the town. Dejected and frustrated at the current state of things, and having been forced to cancel tours and upcoming shows, Tropic’s new single hopes to serve as a reminder that better days are coming.

Equal parts nostalgic throwback and futuristic forward thinking, Tropic is fast becoming an unstoppable force in 2020. Their signature sound has captured the attention of critics and fans alike. Tropic's recent single 'Alive' received immense support from Spotify's editorial team, garnering placements on 9 New Music Friday playlists across Asia. The single has since been on constant rotation on 3 Spotify editorial playlists and has racked up more than 700,000 streams since its release. The single's remix was also added to Spotify's Electro Mix playlist.

"Born from a place of frustration and anxiety for the uncertain future ahead of us, our new single 'Slave to the Rhythm' is a reminder that sometimes, we have to take a moment to let loose and let go. We've seen and felt the effects of the pandemic, how it has become an ever present topic in any conversation, crushed our spirits, and dampened our outlook on life. We wanted to help people remember that joy can be found in the smallest of things, and that sometimes surrendering to the things we cannot control can help us find a way to enjoy life again. Music has always been our anchor, a constant in our life that can never be taken away from us, and hopefully it can be a way to see us through these dark times."

'Slave to the Rhythm' is out Friday, March 5th on all major music outlets.
